ENGLISH PARTNERSHIPS

English Partnerships was set up to play a major role in the government's regeneration and inward investment strategies. Its task is to release the potential of vacant and derelict land in towns, cities and rural areas of England, making it available for employment, green space, housing or any other use which will help to regenerate the area.

A key part of the agency's approach is to work in partnership with local communities and voluntary organisations on projects which will encourage social innovation in the areas of greatest need. Wherever possible we will strive to maximise opportunities for local people in the projects we promote.

TOOLS FOR COMMUNITY DESIGN

Tools for Community Design is a programme to develop and promote good practice in community architecture, planning and design through the production and distribution of high quality how-to-do-it information.

The programme is based at The Prince of Wales's Institute of Architecture in London and independently financed by sponsorship. It is coordinated by Nick Wates, a Senior Research Associate of the Institute, with assistance from community planner John Thompson, community development consultant Ros Tennyson and a small international group of advisors.

Specific projects within the overall Tools for Community Design programme are developed in partnership with relevant practitioners and institutions.

The handbook on Action Planning is the programme's first significant publication and partners are now being sought for further initiatives.

THE PRINCE OF WALES'S INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTURE

THE SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE AND THE BUILDING ARTS

THE FOUNDATION COURSE

THE FOUNDATION COURSE is a unique, intensive, one year full-time course designed for those who wish to pursue a career in architecture, the building crafts or the applied arts. The course leads to a certificate in Architecture and the Building Arts awarded by the University of Wales.

The broad syllabus involves the students in a series of craft-based projects in the workshops, regular life drawing classes, design projects ranging in scale from small architectural elements to whole areas of a city, an opportunity to work with a community on an urban design project, and some practical experience of building. The lead tutors for each project are drawn from a distinguished and active international group of visiting lecturers.

Strong emphasis is placed on relating theory to practice. Through lectures, seminars, practical exercises, and visits to urban and rural sites, students gain an understanding of the order to be found in both the natural and the built environment and explore ways of applying it in their own work. They are also taught the principles and techniques of traditional building and how these might be used appropriately today. Above all students are encouraged to find ways of returning human values to architecture through the integration of the building arts and crafts.

Applications are encouraged from candidates of any age or background.

AMERICAN SUMMER SCHOOL

THE AMERICAN SUMMER SCHOOL is designed to introduce people from diverse backgrounds to the aims of the Institute. Organised over a period of six weeks the Summer School introduces students to a variety of disciplines including traditional language and craft, the elements of urban form, the civilized landscape, and building design and construction.

These disciplines are further supplemented with lectures and seminars on history and theory, painting and life drawing, and community planning. At the core of the American Summer School lies the relationship between European architecture and urbanism, and the development of the New World.

Open to applicants of any age with a degree in architecture or a related subject, or equivalent experience.

THE GRADUATE COURSE

THE GRADUATE COURSE consists of two years of academic study sandwiching a year of supervised practice in an approved design office, craft workshop, or other organisation. Therefore it is not necessary for students to have taken a year out after their first degree before coming to the Institute. The course leads to an MA in Architecture from the University of Wales. For students with RIBA part 1 it carries exemption from RIBA part 2.

The first year of the course is intense, comprising a series of relatively short design projects; a harmonious technology course, which enables students to practise the building crafts such as thatching and bricklaying; a community planning project; regular life drawing classes; and a collaborative design project which encourages the students to work as a team.

Students are helped to find a placement for the second year, often in a practice associated with the Institute.

The third year allows students to reflect on their past experiences and further develop a critical view of both practice and theory through seminars in architectural history and philosophy and a comprehensive design project.

Throughout the course there are lectures on the principles underlying traditional architecture from all cultures.

Applications are invited from those with a first degree in architecture or a related discipline.

THE PRINCE OF WALES'S INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTURE

THE INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTURE was founded in 1992 by HRH The Prince of Wales to explore, teach, and promote ways of improving the quality of the built environment.

The broad approach of the Institute provides a radical alternative to conventional architectural education because its courses cover all aspects of the Building Arts and Crafts both philosophically and practically.

The School of Architecture and the Building Arts is housed in two Nash villas overlooking Regent's Park in London. The school is small and friendly, with less than a hundred staff and students, but exceptionally well-equipped.

Each student has seventy square feet of personal studio space. There are metal and wood work-shops, studios for sculpture and art classes, and a courtyard which is used for stone-carving, bricklaying, thatching, and other building crafts.

All full-time students have classes in computer-aided design and photography, after which they have access to the computer workshop and darkrooms. The Institute also has a library and a dining room with a gallery space for public exhibitions.

IN ADDITION TO THE SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE and the Building Arts, which offers the three courses described in this leaflet, the Institute has a Visual Islamic and Traditional Arts Department, and a Research Department.

The Institute also has an affiliated Project's Office, which, among other things, runs an Urban Design Task Force for six weeks each summer in two or three European cities. The Task Force brings together an extraordinary range of people from many different countries to tackle a series of specific urban problems. Applications are welcomed from those involved in all aspects of building, who have a first degree or equivalent experience.

For the general public the Institute runs a programme of lectures, exhibitions, workshops, and seminars.

Please contact us for further details.

Bursaries are available for all courses offered by the Institute.
